

ABOUT LAZY FARE

Lazy Fare is an unusual and very personal collection of recipes and food stories.

This independent publication is the work of Jane Cornes Maclean, who wrote, photographed and designed the book herself because, basically, she's a bit mad.

Jane's witty stories and down to earth recipes are borne of a lifetime of food obsession and self-confessed laziness.

"I've made it my life's work to garner as much praise as I can while doing as little as possible," she says.

Jane was state editor for Gourmet Traveller magazine for over 10 years and wrote restaurant reviews for Post Newspapers under the byline "Madame Lush".

She was also food and wine editor at Scoop magazine.

When the coronavirus put paid to Jane's freelance writing work, she began sifting through her best-loved recipes and published food stories with a view to creating the book she had been managing to avoid writing for years.

"It was time," she says. "I've eaten such lovely food as a professional food writer, and I wanted to recreate it without all the hoo-hah."

And that's exactly what you get with Lazy Fare – a collection of simple recipes that celebrate fresh produce and give the reader some sneaky kitchen hacks for turning out gourmet-worthy dishes with – frankly – very little effort at all.

And then there are Jane's stories.

In "Turning the tables", she writes about an abortive evening working as a waitress.

In "Cruisin' with Soph", she recounts a gentle week spent with her young daughter on a cruise ship.

Jane also writes about her time spent with the late, great Antonio Carluccio, and her integral role in celebrating the birth of Western Australia's first black truffle.

Beautifully written, designed and photographed entirely by the author, Lazy Fare is destined to find a home on the bookshelves of food lovers everywhere. At least Jane hopes so.
